RED Cypress ... THE WOOD ETERNAL

Endowed by Nature to Withstand Weather, Rot, Insects

Florida's Tidewater Red Cypress has been named "the wood eternal" . . . and justifiably so. For down through the centuries there are countless examples of its amazing durability under all conditions of exposure. Tidewater Red Cypress was first used commercially by the Spaniards in search of the "Fountain of Youth". They named it "the wood eternal" because it apparently never decayed. History records that the Egyptians used Cypress for their mummy cases as far back as 3,000 B.C. In fact, the oldest living thing on earth is believed to be a Cypress tree at Rio del Tulle, Mexico, estimated to be between 5,000 and 7,000 years old. In old southern burying yards, Cypress posts and grave markers erected in 1770 are still to be found in excellent condition.

CYPRESS FURNITURE FACTORY

was founded a decade ago in Miami, Fla. Its first product was a chaise lounge, similar to that shown on the next page. Its popularity with Hotels, Motels and Cabana Clubs in this area created a demand for more of the same type of leisure furniture. The results now used throughout the country, and in Latin American countries, are shown in the following pages.

The Bureau of Entomology, U.S. Dep't. of Agriculture, states ". . . a careful examination of early Spanish construction in Florida and Louisiana shows them to be exceptionally free from termite attack. Cypress is now shipped to the tropics, to be used where termites are prevalent . . . Cypress is especially desirable for outdoor use, where it is subject to sudden and frequent changes of weather . . ." No other wood can even approach the tremendous records for durability and performance established by Tidewater Red Cypress.

A giant Red Cypress tree about to be felled. Growing in tide-water swamps, many of them are more than 1,000 years old and tower more than 100 feet in height.

Easily Rolled from Place to Place

MODEL 500 CL

Approx. Wgt. 40 lbs.

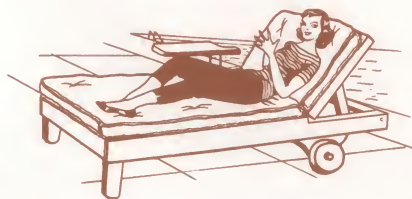

Our latest version of the first Chaise produced at our plant. Hotels, Motels, Cabana clubs and prominent residences located close to the ocean found that salt water spray, dampness and steady exposure did not cause deterioration of this CYPRESS Chaise. Despite its moderate cost, replacement was no longer necessary as with other types of outdoor furniture, and maintenance was reduced to a minimum or entirely eliminated.

WOOD THAT'S LASTING PLUS CONSTRUCTION THAT'S LASTING

Leisure Furniture

A vintage illustration of a tropical outdoor furniture scene. In the foreground, a man in a striped shirt and dark pants is relaxing on a wooden lounge chair with a green cushion, holding a drink. Next to him is a small wooden table with a pitcher and glasses. To the left, a woman in a swimsuit sits at a wooden dining table with a man in a patterned shirt. A large green umbrella provides shade over the dining area. In the background, there is a wooden building, palm trees, and a swimming pool with a diving board.
